Paul Catalanotto majored in Communications design at Pratt Institute but it was while he was working as an artisan plasterer creating plaster wall finishes that he developed his skills and proprietary medium that he uses to create his polished frescos.

While Michelangelo brushed his colors on over a freshly plastered surface, Catalanotto mixes his colors into the plaster and applies it only using trowels. He likens his trowels to forces of nature, compressing, burying, scraping back, pushing and pulling the tinted plaster to bring out its true colors. His process yields dramatic abstract compositions with subtle permutations of color that stimulates a unique sense of imagery for each viewer.
