Kim Bricker is a contemporary printmaking artist currently living and working in Jersey City, NJ. She uses a technique of monoprint and monotype layering to create abstracted landscapes on paper.

In addition to representing the colors, forms, and moods that a landscape can take on throughout time and space, her work addresses the diversity of viewpoints that observe, utilize and remember a landscape.

Kim received a BA in Fine Arts from Carnegie Mellon University, and an MA in Museum Studies, Exhibition Design from George Washington University.
