

Russell Christian

@watteyesore

Russell Christian grew up in the UK, and went to Art School in Bristol. He has made his living handling and installing Art, and as a designer, illustrator, and teacher.

He has created illustrations for a number of publications including the New York Times and the New Yorker. He has published comics, created temporary installations using wood and cardboard, has drawn directly on walls, and has written and performed monologues in self-built sets and theater environments.

He raised his family in New Jersey, where he currently resides. He obsessively draws, writes, paints and builds things, and teaches art at a private elementary school.

Portrait of Russell Christian alter ego, Art O'Connor, by daughter, Violet Christian.
